- English 388: Professional and Technical Writing [Spring 2021, Fall 2020, Spring 2020]
  - Students assess the rhetorical situation in order to meet readers' genre expectations. They learn the conventions of several professional and technical writing genres and engage in the recursive writing process from brainstorming to revision. They use varied modes of communication that respond to contemporary technical writing work environments while writing white papers, proposals, resumes, press releases, web content, and websites. The course focuses on Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion in the professional documents written.
- English 302: Advanced Composition [Spring 2020, Fall 2019]
  - Students analyze the rhetorical situation and rhetorical context in order to develop audience-focused academic writing. They use critical reading skills for academic and non-academic texts relevant to their field of study and engage in the recursive nature of the writing process to develop and respond to well-crafted research questions. Students write literature reviews, research proposals, and annotated bibliographies.
- Art and Visual Technology 395: Writing for Artists [Spring 2019]
  - Students spend significant time improving writing skills by working through the varied stages of the writing process. They develop critical writing skills used to inform professional writing for career advancement. Students improve thinking and reading skills used to assess writing situations when writing art reviews, artist statements, bios, and curatorial proposals.
- English Composition 101: Composition [Fall 2018, Spring 2018, Fall 2017]
  - Students improve their understanding of the recursive nature of the writing process from brainstorming to revision. They respond to varied rhetorical situations with awareness to genre, audience, and purpose. They develop thesis statements that are well-stated and developed into arguments when writing essays that surpass the level of difficulty of the five-paragraph essay. They write annotated bibliographies, narrative arguments, and compose radical revisions.

Clayton State University | Morrow, GA | August 2015 - July 2017 | Adjunct Professor

- English Composition 1101: Rhetoric and Composition [Spring 2017, Spring 2016, Fall 2015]
  - Students learn and analyze argumentation using various genres of academic writing while working on developing thesis statements, topic sentences, supporting sentences, introductions and conclusions for coherent arguments in writing cultural criticism and critical arguments. They effectively synthesize sources in their argumentative writing. Students become familiar with the library research process using databases and search keywords.
- English Composition 1102: Rhetoric and Composition [Summer 2017, Spring 2017, Fall 2016]
  - Students became familiar with thesis statements and composing practices used to argue personal perspectives. They learn to write for specific audiences and with clear purposes that are organized and coherent without the five-paragraph essay format. Students engage with various academic writing genres including personal narratives, expository essays, and literary arguments.
